Portfolio Manager Commentary

Global equities bounced back from losses in May as escalating trade tensions eased prior to the G20 meeting and expectations for central banks to ease monetary policy increased. Bond markets were supported by the notion of central banks pivoting to a more dovish stance in policy. In the US all broad sectors rose led by materials, energy and tech, sectors that have recently been under pressure from the trade tensions. Economic data showed employment remains strong and inflation below 2%. European stocks rose on the ease in trade tensions and the indication from the ECB that more quantitative easing is likely. As with the US, manufacturing remained weak while the service sector is relatively solid. In the UK, markets rose with the rest of the world amid the Conservative party battle for leadership. Japanese stocks were also lifted by the ease in trade tensions while economic data remains mixed. Emerging Markets rose in similar fashion to the developed markets. China obviously benefited from the ease in trade tensions. Technology was among the leading sectors boosted by the news that the Trump administration may ease restrictions on leading telecom equipment maker Huawei. Latin America was also up strong as bilateral trade tensions with Mexico eased and pension reform in Brazil continuing to progress. The World Selection portfolios were higher, led by equities and Emerging Market debt. All equity regions were higher with the strongest returns from the US and Europe however all other regions were close behind. Within bonds the leading sectors were Emerging Market local and USD denominated bonds. During the month we took profit in Emerging Market bonds but continue to be overweight in the sector and reduced our position in short maturities in the government bond sector following the recent strength in the sector.
